I do not agree with the government interfering with the innovations of a company just because their competitors believe it is unfair. The lawsuit against microsoft becuae some people think they are charging too much for software is rediculous. If you compare the cost of products and/or services from other software/service vendors you will see that Microsoft is right inline with market standards. The complaint of competitors that Microsoft ties or bundles software with and operating system is simply laughable. Since when does a consumer complain when they get a free add-on for a product they purchased. It is like saying that a car manufacturer cannot install Goodyear tires on a car because maybe a consumer will not want them. If you dont want to use the feature then dont. AOL I believe is more guilty of poor software than any other vendor I know of.
